Biennial Report Shows State Open to Diseased Cattle -Action Regarding Dogs.

The blennial report of Heman O. Averill, commissioner on domestic animals, for the two years ended Sept. 20, 1919, has been made public. It shows that the commissioner examined 4.518 cattle in 1909 and 4.672 during 1910, and condemned in all 1.137. The total amount allowed for condemned cattle was $6.461.50 in 1909 and $6.744.50 in 1910. The average price allowed per head was $11.72 in 1909 and $11.50 in 1910. The number of cattle reported as having been brought into the state during the period covered by the report is as follows: Cows 4.435, heiters 1.861, oxen 185, steers 984, bulls 561, calves 7.914.

The figures, he says, raise the following inquiries: "What are the benefits to the consumer of milk and its products?" "Are the cattle owners of the state protected by the destruction of the tuberculous animals?" and "Is further legislation needed to increase the efficiency of this department?"

The commissioner then quotes from a various scientists to show that tuberculous animals?" and "Is further legislation needed to increase the efficiency of this seems wise to consider how the germs are conveyed from the cow to the human.
